

For ultra-high net worths only - the million-dollar concubine

25 October 2007

Ian Allison, London

Fetted with expensive gifts running to millions of dollars and contracted over set periods of time as required, meet the ultra-high net worth concubine.

The super-rich enjoy the best of everything and that includes sex, the absolute pinnacle being a highly trained and sophisticated concubine available for contractual hire for the appropriate sum of money, according to a new book on elite affluent behavior.

There is a case study on just such a professional to found within “The Sky’s the Limit” a new book by authors Russ Alan Prince and Hannah Shaw, which aims to tell the real story about what goes on behind the gilded doors of today’s ultra-affluent.

Meet Elizabeth, almost six feet and a natural blond, multilingual and possessing an advanced education, who contracts her services for a period of time – usually a year – with a single, super-rich individual.

For this commitment, her normal fee is $1 million paid in after-tax money, according to the book.

Elizabeth keeps all the gifts she receives during the course of her contract such as a Van Cleef & Arpels diamond and ruby necklace, an antique jade pendant, a Lamborghini, a flat in London and a beach house in Ibiza.

Elizabeth also has access to her client’s resources and jets, private islands, and various homes for the duration of their arrangement. In exchange for this lavish remuneration, Elizabeth is available when and wherever her client wants her, the book continues.

The anecdotal evidence cited within, The Sky’s the Limit is based on up-close and personal interviews with more than 600 private jet owners, each with an average net worth of $89 million.